On an intellectual level, we know that adverts lie to us. No one seriously thinks that wearing Axe will get you laid or that changing toothpaste will make your smile more radiant. Yet there are certain basic assumptions we've become so used to making that we take them for granted—allowing canny advertisers to screw us over when we least expect it.

It's very hard for me to read people who defend Assange as a hero because they obviously believe him. While I haven't given Assange much time personally, I will say when he spoke out on Sean Hannity's show in 2017, he gave me a very clear window into his truthfulness, and I will tell you I wouldn't trust this man or his motives one centimeter.

Everything a narcissist/sociopath says or does is a trick of smoke and mirrors - a narcissistic ploy - intended to distract from the reality of what he's really up to. If you pay careful attention instead of reacting to his/her behaviors, you can turn these ploys into your advantage. Many of us already know that the old joke - How can you tell a narcissist is lying?
