Application Note An 941 International

www.irf.com AN-941 2 General observations. Paralleling reduces conduction losses and junction-to-case thermal resistance. However, switching losses remain the same, or may even increase. If they are the dominant losses, only a thermal resistance improvement will be achieved by paralleling.

Application Note AN-941 - Infineon Technologies

C/ W, and K is the per unit change of ON resistance per °C. (2) The voltage drop, V, across the parallel group is: (3) The resistance of the one low resistance device at its operating temperature is: (4) where R(min) 25 is the limiting minimum value of ON resistance at 25°C, and I(max) is the current in this device.

Application Note AN-941 - Industrial Power Electronics

As this application note shows, of “bottom line” importance is the total gate charge required for switching. The lower the charge, the lower is the gate drive current needed to achieve a given switching time. A general comparison between hypothetical MOSFETs brands “X” and “Y” is illustrated in the Figure.

Application Note AN-944 - International Rectifier ...

This application note discusses the breakdown voltage, on-resistance, transconductance, threshold voltage, diode forward voltage, power dissipation, dynamic characteristics, gate charge and dV/dt capability of the power MOSFET.

Application Note AN-1084 - Infineon Technologies

(HEXFET is the trademark for International Rectifier Power MOSFETs) Topics covered: A description of the circuit Performance Power supply requirements Set-up and troubleshooting Performance summary Related topics The class AB amplifier described in this application note uses a complementary pair of HEXFET Power MOSFET devices as the output stage.
