Invasive Species Eurasian Collared Dove

This is a list of invasive species in North America. A species is regarded as invasive if it has been introduced by human action to a location, area, or region where it did not previously occur naturally (i.e., is not a native species), becomes capable of establishing a breeding population in the new location without further intervention by humans, and becomes a pest in the new location ...

List of invasive species in North America - Wikipedia

A complete list of introduced species for even quite small areas of the world would be dauntingly long. Humans have introduced more different species to new environments than any single document can hope to record. This list is generally for established species with truly wild populations— not kept domestically—that have been seen numerous times, and have breeding populations.

Why Study Urban Wildlife? Wildlife is present even in the densest of cities. In order to preserve biodiversity, maintain ecosystem function, reduce property damage, foster safe neighborhoods, and encourage positive associations with wildlife, the study of urban animal communities seeks to understand stressors on wildlife populations, species interactions, and sources of human-wildlife conflict.

February 9, 2019: While out doing my Audubon bluebird survey, it was a raptor kind of day. I had a flyover by a Bald Eagle, Red-tail Hawks in several location and a female Northern Harrier! After I got home from The Scoop getting more black oil sunflower seeds, I had a Cooper's Hawk fly over and perch across the street. Sufficient to say, the birds in the backyard retreated.
