I'm sorry, but the organic standards does not allow GMO ingredients. If the product is labeled USDA organic, it does not contain GMO's. Of course there's always a chance an organic crop has been "contaminated" by nearby GMO's or a company is lying about a product actually being organic.

The Shocking Difference Between Organic & Non-GMO Labels ...

Due to massive government subsidies given to farmers to grow genetically engineered crops in the past, U.S. food manufacturers and farmers are now being caught blindsided by the sweeping demand for non-gmo and organic crops. In a twist of irony, this is driving a massive increase of organic crop imports from nations that are largely free of bioengineering.
