TRUTH, LIE DETECTORS, AND OTHER PROBLEMS IN LABOR ARBITRATION

Witnesses in an arbitration are sworn to tell the truth in a manner similar to the procedure used in a court of law. However, this process does not guarantee that a particular witness will tell the truth. Most experienced arbitrators are sensitive to internal inconsistencies in a witness's testimony and to the witness' responses to opposing counsel's cross examination when assessing the ...

The arbitral process is not the search for epistemological truth, but it is a search for a true and accurate resolution of controverted positions. Language is the necessary medium for the reaching this accuracy, but both practical and more profound language issues arise that inhibit the proper search for "truth" in international arbitration.
